It's never too early for children to start learning about hand hygiene and the role it plays in preventing the spread of germs and illness. As well as understanding 'when' to clean their hands it's also important they know 'how' to do it effectively.

The Infection Prevention Society (IPS) sees the development of the Hand Wash Squad App as a fun and innovative way in which to engage children in learning how to clean their hands in different ways, helping them to adopt good habits from a young age that stay with them for life. Although aimed at children of ages between four to eight we think children of all ages, and adults, will enjoy playing and learning together.

The Education and Professional Development Committee of IPS has reviewed the game and fully supports the messages inherent within the game.

Kind regards,

Pat Cattini
IPS President
